Western Snowy Plover

At one time, California beaches supported thousands of Snowy Plovers, but with the loss of nesting habitat and the impact of visitors on nesting areas, the number of Snowy Plovers has declined significantly. My name is Matt Lau and I'm a Wildlife Biologist for Point Reyes National Seashore. Visitors can help us by staying away from fenced-off Plover nesting areas, keeping dogs on a leash, and keeping trash off the beach that attracts predators. Let's all protect the natural heritage of California's beaches for the future.
